The Impact of Digital Literacy

In recent years, the growth of international tourism have a significant impact on local communities. Every traveler who visits protected natural parks now need to follow strict guidelines to preserve the environment. The variety of flora and fauna found in these areas require constant protection from human interference. However, the lack of resources often hinder conservation efforts if governments do not prioritize environmental funding.

Local residents and business owners often complains about the noise pollution caused by heavy traffic. A team of researchers believe that sustainable practices should be adopted immediately by the hospitality industry. Each of the hotel managers argue that reducing plastic waste is the most effective way to protect the oceans. Furthermore, neither the tourists nor the tour operator have taken enough responsibility for the litter left behind after large excursions.

In addition, the high number of visitors mean that historical monuments are at risk of damage. Building new infrastructure for these sites cost a lot of taxpayers' money every year. This financial pressure limit the ability of local councils to maintain the beauty of the landmarks. It is essential that we find a balance to ensure that future generations continue to enjoy these world heritage sites.
